COURSE PRESENTATION

The course at Beaux-Arts de Paris offers a grounding in both artistic approaches and issues in art today. Learning is founded on practical independent studio work, under the guidance of an artist. Studio work is a central and fundamental basis for student development.

Drawing classes, considered as cross-disciplinary and complementary to studio practice, constitute a common core for first- and second-year students.

As of the second year of study, students choose courses in techniques / skills according to their artistic practice. Courses in different techniques are offered in the Printmaking / Bookmaking, Materials / Space and Foundation Skills Departments.

Extensive access is given to new technologies and their impact on the creation and distribution of art today. The Digital Centre offers around forty courses spread over the two semesters.

Significant importance is given to theoretical courses, which are a fundamental element in student learning.

Foreign language learning is included as a mandatory part of the curriculum throughout the course programme. The Beaux Arts de Paris course is supplemented by a professional internship or a study abroad programme in the fourth year.

In the fifth year, students attend seminars as part of the preparation for the National Fine Arts Degree (equivalent Master of Arts).

STUDIO AND CLASS PROGRAMME

At Beaux-Arts de Paris, teaching is divided into seven departments :

- Artistic Practice
- Printmaking / Bookmaking
- Materials / Space
- Foundation Skills
- Drawing
- Theoretical Studies
- Languages

All courses offered are available to exchange students, subject to availability, except for research seminars and degree seminars.

The student exchange programme is as follows:

- One unit of studio practice: 16 credits
- One techniques CU: 6 credits
- A CU of your choice (techniques, drawing or theoretical studies): 6 credits
- One language CU (French as a foreign language is mandatory for non-French speaking students): 2 credits

DEPARTMENT OF ARTISTIC PRACTICE

TYPES OF CU VALIDATED

- Studio CU

The Department of Artistic Practice includes twenty-nine studios under the responsibility of artist-teachers. Studios are a space for artistic practice, creation and experimentation. They are also a space for debate, exchange and criticism. They are also transformed into exhibition spaces at certain times of the year, especially during the degree or assessment periods.

Studios are a dedicated space where students at all stages, from 1st year to 5th, work alongside each other, using multidisciplinary creative techniques under the guidance of a renowned artist. Combining individualized input and collective interaction, studio teaching aims to foster the artistic engagement of each student, gradually helping them to build their own individual artistic language.

The development of inter-studio relationships and critique sessions open a space for dialogue and feed reflection. The studio artist may invite an outside contributor to provide input during studio work. Study trips are sometimes organized. Group exhibition projects or interventions at external venues are often proposed by the studio artists, in collaboration with other institutions. Such projects provide an opportunity for students to experience issues regarding installation, spatial layout, communication, dissemination, and production/publication.

Every student must be registered for artistic practice in a studio. Students can stay in a single studio throughout the course or change according to the development of their work.

PRINTMAKING/BOOKMAKING DEPARTMENT

TYPES OF CU VALIDATED

- Technical CU
- Studio CU

Wernher Bouwens, Aurélie Pagès and Julien Sirjacq all have studios in the Printmaking/Bookmaking Department. Their teaching shares the desire to approach bookmaking in its broadest sense, opening a space for reflection and experimentation in relation to printed art, publication and the production of multiples. Whether examining traditional practices or new technologies, the various fields of bookmaking are viewed as an opportunity for practice, experimentation and experience of functions and usages. There is a collegial structure to the department, but the teaching staff have all developed their own relationship to bookmaking and printmaking.

MATERIALS/SPACE DEPARTMENT

TYPES OF CU VALIDATED

- Technical CU
- Studio CU

The Materials/Space Department offers a very rich range of courses as part of a direct approach to materials and creative techniques and different expressions of painting, sculpture and spatial installation. Collaborations with the school's different departments can be set up as desired, particularly with the Department of Artistic Practices.

Both in Saint-Germain and Saint-Ouen, students have access to specific disciplines within the studios: Mould making, Mosaics, Carving and Painting techniques. Within the department, student work takes the form of both research and artistic experimentation in the studio and participation in exhibitions, interventions in situ projects and performances. Visual artists, writers, scientists, researchers, architects, urban planners and other specialists who work in relation to the themes developed, are invited as part of workshops that enrich student research.

The diversity of the experiences available helps to provide a rich and multifarious teaching environment that maintains motivation and is constantly renewed under the demands of artistic projects. In contact with these different mediums and the possibilities offered by different materials, students are able to learn about various practices and generate work that is specific and individual.

Led by artists or art technicians, skills workshops help students broaden the field of their personal work as of the second year and allow them to develop through the prism of mastery of different mediums, removing material barriers to their creation. Skills workshops constitute complementary technical support for the artistic practice work carried out in the studio.

THEORETICAL STUDIES DEPARTMENT

TYPES OF CU VALIDATED

- Lectures: Theoretical CU

Theoretical teaching at Beaux-Arts de Paris is founded with the conviction of 'making students autodidacts'. Students are therefore offered as many opportunities as possible to broaden their knowledge. The history of art classes are designed to accompany first to third year students and give them the means of interpreting all forms of art, whatever its provenance, whatever its period. The theoretical teaching programme is also structured to help undergraduates come to terms with issues that are not solely confined to the field of art. Whether they be political, philosophical, scientific or societal, these issues represent an opportunity to stimulate students' curiosity, sharpen their critical faculties and feed their artistic practice.

The Chair of the 'Now' is made up of a set of classes entitled Diagonales, which are identified by discipline. Each of the Diagonales has a coordinating teacher, who will invite two to three guests to develop or shed light on an aspect of current events in their discipline. The Diagonales of the 'Now' are: Sciences / Society / Literature / Philosophy / Economy / Politics / Semiology. Each semester, one week is specifically reserved for the Diagonale workshops.

Research seminars and degree seminars offer master's students the chance to go into further depth in specific areas but are not open to exchange students.

Theoretical courses are taught in French.
